

Sebastian Schneeweiss, MD, ScD, is Associate Professor in the Department of Medicine at Harvard Medical School and in the Department of Epidemiology at Harvard School of Public Health. He serves as vice chief and director of Drug Evaluation and Outcomes Research for the Division of Pharmacoepidemiology and Pharmacoeconomics at Brigham and Women's Hospital. Dr. Schneeweiss is also director and chair of the Executive Board of the DEcIDE Research Center (Developing Evidence to Inform Decisions about Effectiveness) at Brigham and Women's Hospital and of the DEcIDE Methods Center. His research interests include the comparative effectiveness and safety of pharmaceuticals and biotech products, and developing advanced methods for analyzing electronic healthcare databases and registries. Dr. Schneeweiss received a BA from Gymnasium Icking (Germany), an MD from Ludwig-Maximilians-University Medical School, and an ScD in Epidemiology from Harvard School of Public Health.